YVETTE

Riverdale, Bronx: I stop in a supermarket to pick up a loaf of whole wheat bread which I plan to toast and give to my sister-in-law as a housewarming gift. Unfortunately, they are out of whole wheat, so I have to settle for sourdough. I just hope it goes with the yellow and purple shag carpeting. While I am waiting on line to pay for the bread, a frantic woman runs into the store. She hysterically screams that when she got home, she realized that she had left a big bag of goodies she had shoplifted at the market. The manager says he has the stolen merchandise, but refuses to give it to the woman unless she will pay the sales tax. The woman says that she'll return for the package on Double Coupon Day.

Midtown Manhattan: My first stop in the job market after graduating from Hunter College with a degree in merchandising is Korcy's Department Store. Fresh from four years of higher education, I apply for a job which entails crushing cartons, attaching sale tickets to merchandise, sweeping pins out of dressing rooms, and, if they really like my work, organizing stock according to size, color, or type. Could I handle it? Well, I always love a challenge.

I walk into the personnel office and, immediately, something there starts irritating my eyes. I realize it is the woman behind the desk. She reminds me of someone, but I can't put my finger on who. Suddenly, it hits me. She is the spitting image of Bela Lugosi. After I fill out the application, the interrogation begins.

"Can you work full time?"

"Yes."

"Part time?"

"Yes."

"Nights?"

"Yes."

"Weekends?"

"Yes."

"Temporary?"

"Yes."

"Well, I'm sorry, but we have no openings."

NEW YORK

by Brian Fox

Brighton Beach, Brooklyn: I am playing paddle ball on an outside court at the Brighton Baths. A ball from another game comes over the wall and lands in my court. Before I get a chance to throw it back, a paddle comes flying over the wall, also, landing in my court. Moments later, a man, following the same trajectory as the ball and paddle, lands in the middle of my court, interrupting my game. Though the man has lapsed into unconsciousness, I tell him that I have the court till four and that he must get off it. As I inspect the body, I discover how the game "squash" got its name. For the

MEMORIES

Remembrance of things past — zany things — in the Big Apple by an observer who's off the wall himself next forty minutes, my partner and I play around the fallen man.

On the way out of the Baths, I see an attractive young woman. I approach her and, after several minutes of small talk, ask if I could give her a call sometime. She tells me her apartment has no phone. I ask if I could stop by to see her and she tells me her apartment has no door.

Rego Park, Queens: I am charged with having unlawful sex with a minor. I explain that the gal was a miner — a coal miner — and was thirty-three years old. They said they weren't interested in excuses. I plea bargain to the lesser charge of having unlawful sex with a mynah bird. The judge gives me a choice of sentence — either ten years on Devil' . . . er, Ricker's Island or three months on probation during which I must attend weekly therapy sessions with a court appointed psychiatrist. I tossed a coin and chose the therapy.

During my first session, I notice the doctor dozing off. I ask him if I am keeping him awake and he answers, "No, I can sleep while you're talking."

At the end of the hour, I ask for his conclusion. He tells me, "All mental illness is psychological, or possibly, all psychology is mental illness."

Central Park, Manhattan: I am sitting on a park bench watching what appears to be a Shakespeare In The Park production of "Hamlet" performed entirely by pigeons. A man, visibly upset, approaches me.

"I feel like no one loves me," he cries.

"Don't say that," I reply, trying to lift his spirits. "I'm sure your parents love you. After all, you are a product of their love for each other."

"No," he wails, "they're the cause of my misery. You see, I just found out that I'm a 'change of light' baby."

"You mean 'change of life' baby."

"No, I mean 'change of light'. About thirty years ago my father picked up my mother hitchhiking, and, at a red light, they jumped into the back seat and that's how I was conceived," he sobs.

I offer him my handkerchief and tell him that perhaps in his hour of need he should turn to inner solace. He asks me where inner solace is to be found and I tell him that I'm not sure, but that it probably was not far from Outer Mongolia and that Greenwich Village would be as good a place as any to start looking. □

RECORDS

Ed Bickert, oft-praised as "the Bill Evans of the guitar" for his impressionistic, pianistic chord voicings, reveals another side of his musical personality on The Ed Bickert Five: At Toronto's Bourbon Street (Concord Jazz). Contrasting with the laid-back grooves and introspective ballads Bickert played with Paul Desmond and on his own dates, this is an out-and-out swinger featuring tenor sax ace Scott Hamilton and cornet whiz Warren Vache. Bassist Steve Wallace and drummer Jake Hanna keep things cookin' while Bickert and company go to town. This is Bickert's most aggressive playing to date, and it's a revelation to hear him apply his harmonic wizardry in this context. It would be interesting to team Bickert with Barney Kessel and/or Herb Ellis for one of Concord's guitar extravaganzas.

Merle Haggard: That's The Way Love Goes (Epic) finds Hag in strong voice with an exceptional batch of new tunes, most authored or co-authored by himself. One hears echoes of Lefty Frizzell everywhere in Hag's vocals here, and the title tune is one of Lefty's as well. "What Am I Gonna Do With The Rest of My Life," "Someday When Things Are Good," "If You Hated Me," and "I Think I'll Stay" are among the best things Haggard has done since leaving Capitol some years back. The album consists entirely of ballads, the instrumentation is fairly low-key, and one yearns for a good hard honky-tonk classic for a change of pace at times. Haggard's own band, The Strangers, appears on only two tracks, and this is a shame. With players like Roy Nichols and Tiny Moore on hand, Hag might cut the boys loose from time to time.

Ray Brown/Monty Alexander/Sam Most: A Ray Brown Three (Concord Jazz) is a cookin', straight-ahead session, one of the more satisfying mainstream jazz lp's of recent years. Brown, one of the guys who wrote the book on walking bass, anchors a smokin' trio with cohorts Monty Alexander (piano) and Sam Most (flute). Drumless trios are most often associated with cool or introspective sounds, but these guys definitely came to swing. In fact, the musicians have such strong time and drive that a casual listener is not likely to realize right off that no drummer is present. Highlights include an R&B-tinged "I Can't Stop Loving You," nice arco work by Brown on the ballad "Too Late Now" and some engaging flute/piano interplay on the opening chorus of "There Is No Greater Love."

BOOKS

Diane Johnson's Dashiell Hammett: A Life (Random House) is the third Hammett biography to appear in recent years, but the first to benefit from the cooperation of Hammett's longtime companion Lillian Hellman. Today, the creator of Sam Spade and the Continental Op is regarded as not only the dean of hard-boiled private-eye writers, but as a writer whose novels transcend the genre stylistically and in their reflection of American values. (One might call Hammett the father of the hard-boiled dick, but this is not quite true, as Carroll John Daly's Race Williams and a few other tough-guy pulp peepers pre-date him). Johnson's book is of value as a source of information rather than as a critical assesment of Hammett's work or an analysis of what made the man tick and why he produced nothing after 1934's "The Thin Man." Our picture of Hammett is rounded out by Hellman's reminisces and information provided by his wife and daughters. Most importantly, we are treated to excerpts from unpublished manuscripts and letters; a long-unavailable magazine piece, "From The Memoirs of A Private Detective," appears in its entirety.

Comic fans will treasure (Superman: From The 30s To The 80s (Crown). Those lurid magazines Junior used to while away the hours with are now Art, and collectors fork over big bucks for comics that are too fragile to read. This attractive volume offers a fifty-year retrospective of the super-hero's exploits. The comics are presented in black and white, although a few strips and numerous covers are reproduced in full color. The brain-child of Jerry Siegel and Joseph Shuster has become one of the world's best-loved and most recognized figures. It's entertaining to go through these strips and observe how the artwork and story-line grew progressively sophisticated over the years. Indeed, no computer-wise child of today would stand for the primitive stories of Superman's early years. Many key stories, including that of the costumed do-gooder's origin, are included here.

A QUARTET OF SHORT SEXY PIECES

by Warren Emery

Four ribticklingly ribald vignettes from our fast-paced, modern and sophisticated society . . .

A beautiful young French girl named Yvonne de la Quiche fell upon hard times and needed money desperately, so she applied for a job at the nearest bordello.

"But you are obviously a genteel, well-brought-up woman of good family," said the madam. "Are you sure you want to work here?"

"I think so," Yvonne said after a moment's hesitation.

"Well then, I must point out, Mademoiselle de la Quiche, that most of our customers want oral sex. Would that be all right with you?"

"I should say not!" snapped the young lady as she rose to leave. "Real Quiches don't eat men."

A businessman decided to buy an office computer and began calling the companies that sell such machines, asking for demonstrations. One by one he went down the list of firms he found advertising in the yellow pages, and every day he listened to a different sales pitch. Soon his head was reeling from all the computer language he heard from the various salespeople calling on him. Finally he called the last company listed in the phone book and arranged an appointment. The following day, right on time, a good-looking girl arrived at his office and told him she represented the company.

"But where's your machine?" he asked. "Right here," she said, pointing to her lush body.

"Very nice . . . but I'm in the market for a computer."

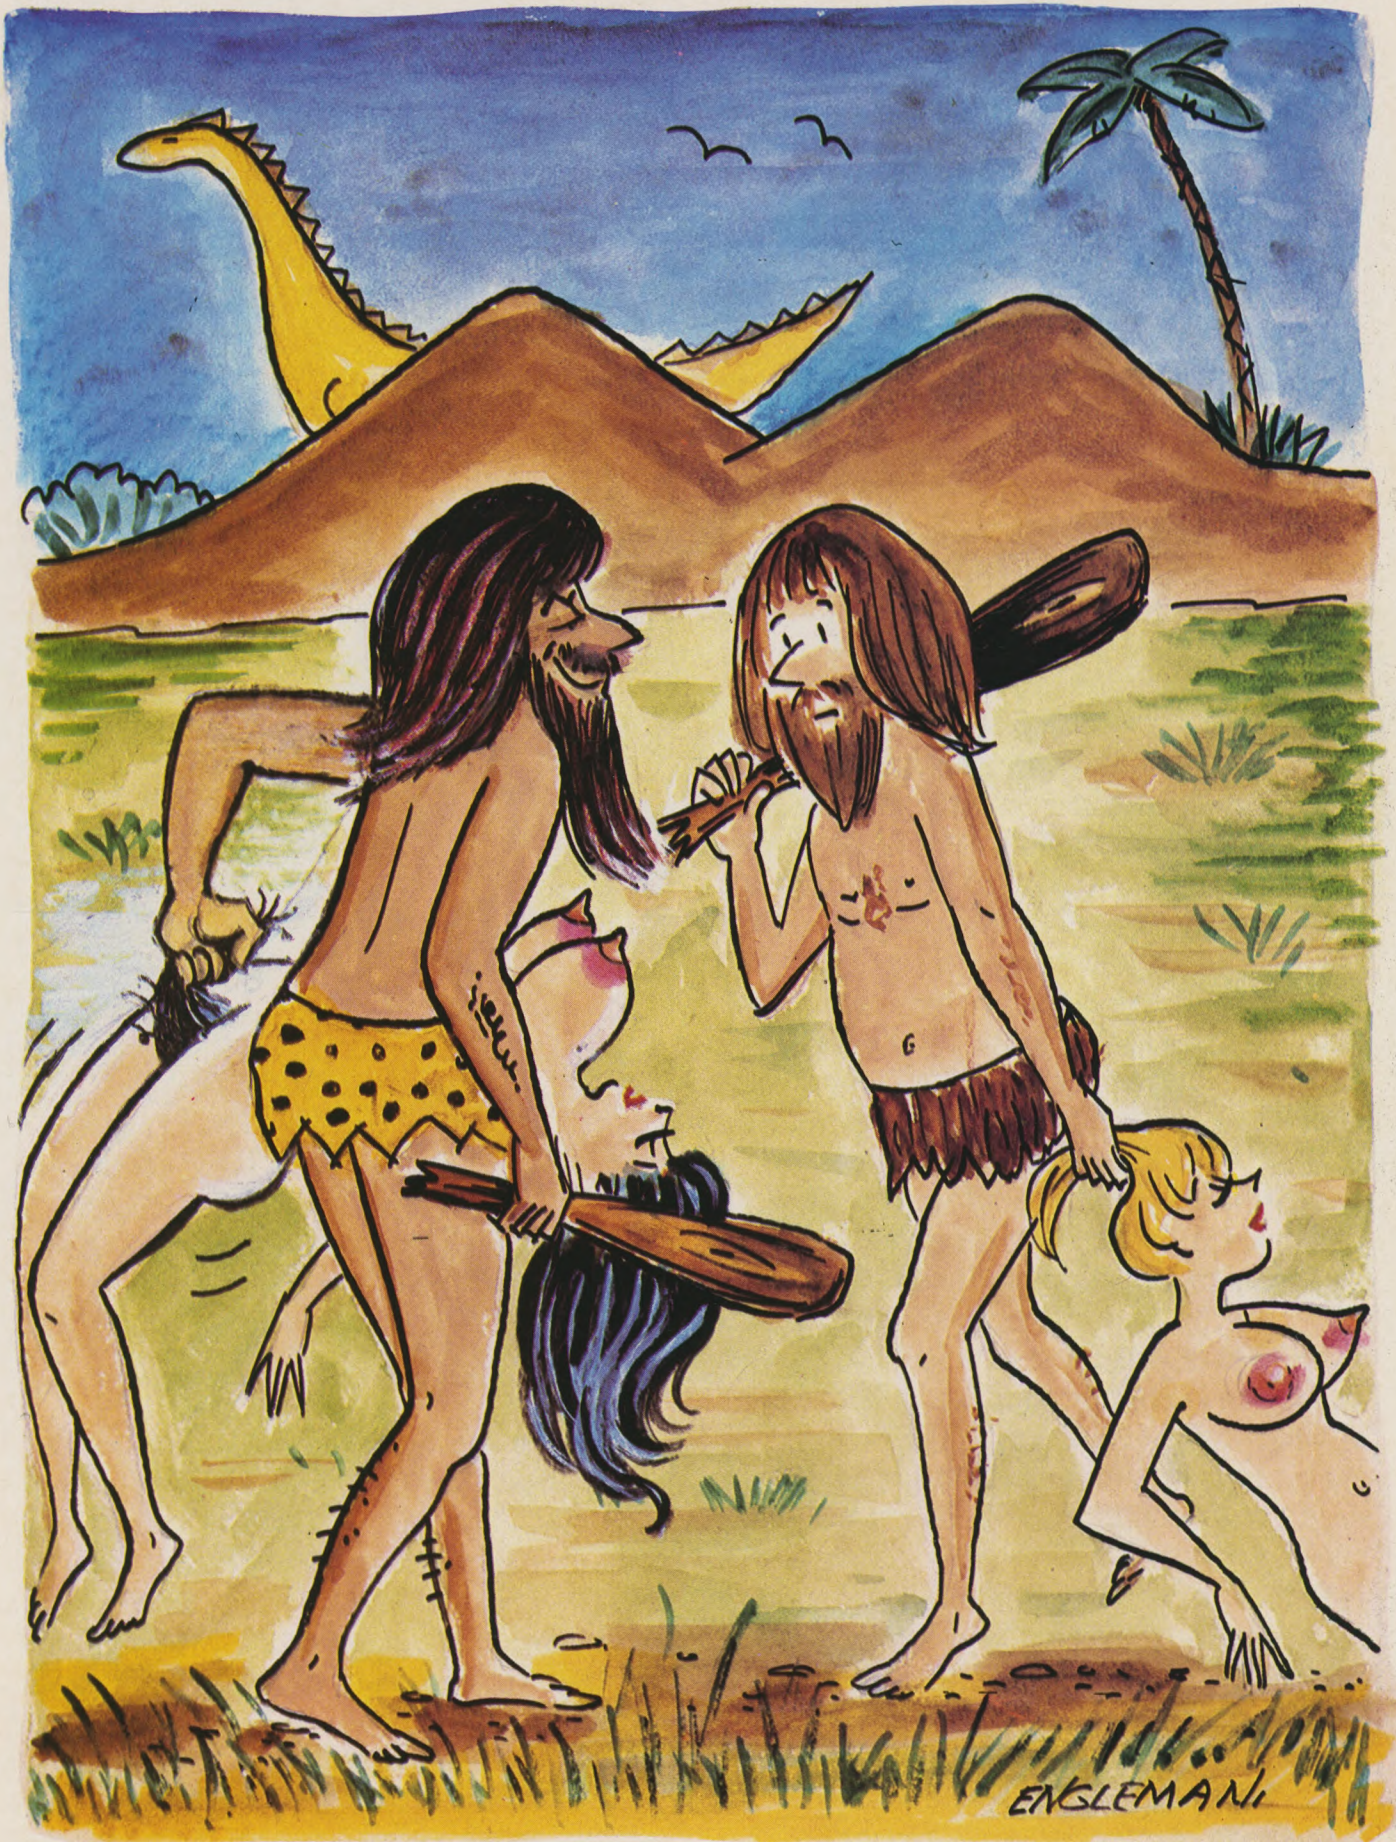

"I can do everything a computer can do," she murmured, putting her hand between his legs. "And what's more, I'm user-friendly."

A very fat man was riding on a bus. Because it was crowded with passengers, he had to stand. Two women sitting together eyed his bulging stomach and giggled. "If that stomach was on a woman," one of them whispered, "she'd be pregnant."

The fat man overheard her remark. "It was, Madam, and she is."

One of the narcotic agents raiding a sex-and-drugs orgy in an apartment building happened to be a secret pot smoker himself. As he ran into a bedroom of the apartment he spotted a shapely nude blonde who had tried to hide her telltale cigarette in a handy but rather unconventional orifice on her body. Bending down, the narc agent peered between her spread thighs, saw the evidence sticking out and said: "What's a nice joint like you doing in a girl like this?"

SMALL BUSINESS BIG SEX

by Leonard Landing

Shelley won't last long in her current job. This tall, young beautiful brunette works in my office building. If I haven't misread her eyes, she finds me as interesting as I find her. We may hit a nearby bar some evening after work.

After work — the grammarians call that an adverbial prepositional clause. I call it the reason I, and a lot of other men, became small businessmen during their free time.

When the personnel department called Shelley in for her final interview, they assigned her to a section run by a very bitter woman who's approximately 35. The bitterness comes from a recent divorce. The divorce was caused by this woman letting herself run to fat and keeping her house like a dirty sty. Her husband found more interesting women. The supervisor's guilt in the divorce won't help Shelley. That poor child is condemned by her youth, her beauty, and her willingness to have a fling with a married man.

I'm part of what the management experts call the middle management team. I could give Shelley a job in my area. I suspect that her knowledge of my power is the real reason for her strong interest in me. The job is open and currently being advertised. Shelley's boss owes me a favor. He's the one above her immediate supervisor. If I asked him for the girl tomorrow, he'd release her.

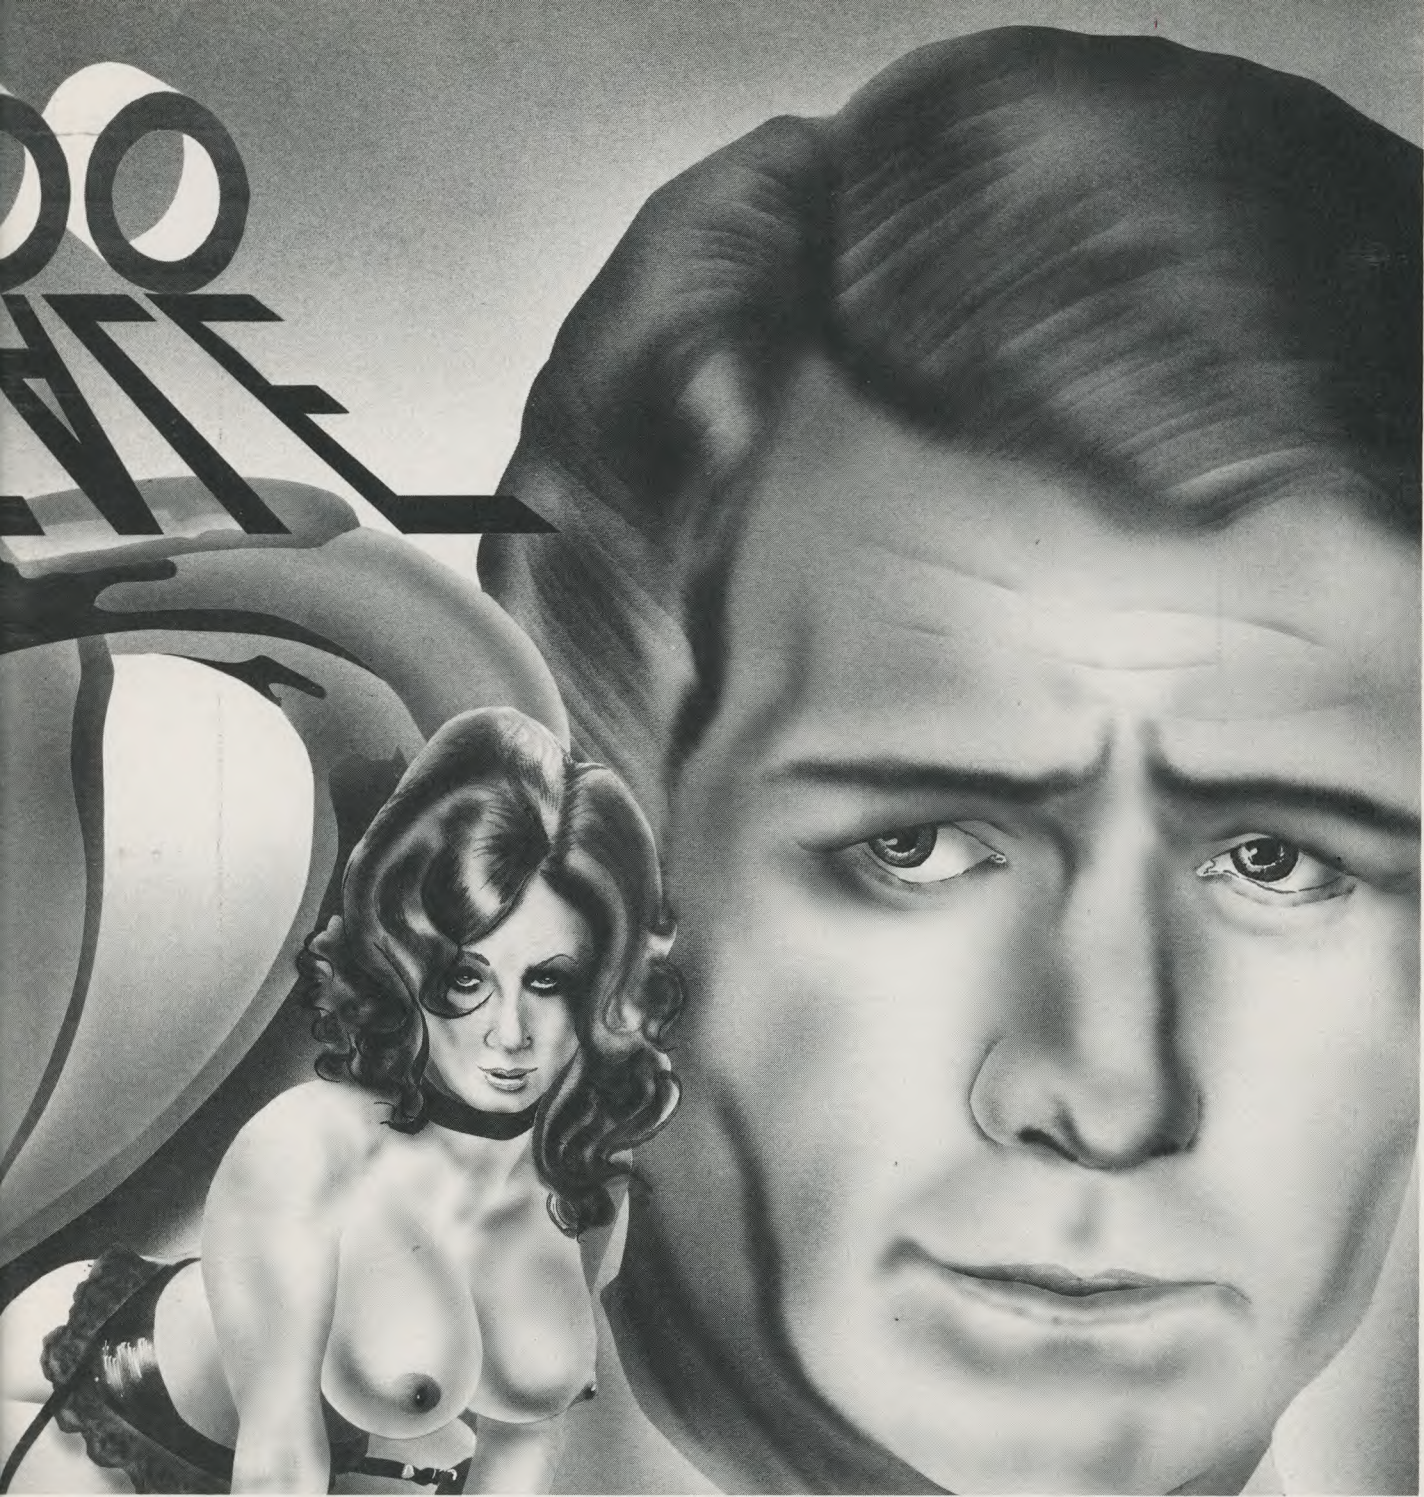

Right now, as I type this article, I can close my eyes and imagine taking Shelley to a three-hour lunch. About 12 minutes (and I'd make it in nine) from the office is a motel and restaurant run by a friend. He's an excellent chef and a discreet host. That lean brunette body on his white crisp sheets . . . . .

My eyes pop open abruptly as I remember my own boss. The bastard talks about tolerance a lot. He's fired two men who mixed sex and work, and he's currently playing hell with the careers of two more he caught. I want Shelley a great deal, but she isn't my only option. Quite frankly, she isn't worth the income she could cost me.

I'm two steps below the top. That puts my boss' boss at the top of the organizational ladder. He freely mixes sex and business. Not only is his current mistress on our payroll; so is one of his former ones. Part of my boss' job includes guaranteeing that nothing negative ever enters the personnel files of the top man's girls. This includes some very justified complaints about their taking three-hour lunches without ever notifying their supervisors.

But only the big boss can mix sex and the workplace and get away with it. The rest of us have to be careful not to get caught. I never manage to catch anyone, male or female, who works in my section. No one would believe some of the lies most of them have told to cover me. The one sonofabitch who wouldn't play the game is still looking for a job. I'll bet he doesn't get one. I have a long memory. Some of my friends make me look forgetful.

Shelley would be too open a risk for the simple reason that hiring her would demonstrate I was out to dip my wick. Despite the claims of some militant women's groups, sex isn't that prevalent in the workplace. In fact, it probably

by Paul Steiner

Your favorite magazine is continuing its regular roundup of some of the raciest, wildest, sexiest bits of action and dialogue from current films, plays, on and off-Broadway, nightclubs and the arts, with special stress on quick snatches from the flicks. Hold on, here we go:

Sell-out audiences went wild over Candy Samples and her incredible bazooms at the Big Apple's Show World where she did her famous act, live. Said one reviewer: "Candy soon takes to the highways, suckling her tit-starved legions in the hinterlands like the very bosom of America... her breasts may someday be enshrined in the Smithsonian."

Porn Queen Sharon Kane plays a rock singer named Pig Slut in Gerard Damiano's most recent flick, "Night Hunger." Commented a veteran porn exhibitor: "Wall to wall genitals grinding it out."

Mother Plucker Feather Co. is the name of a Hollywood boutique that sells great merchandise and notions to many of Tinseltown's famous stars. In case they haven't thought of it, Joan Crawford's biography by her daughter would make a helluva Hollywood Mother Plucker item.

Comic Dick Capri "honoring" Sid Ceasar at a Friars Club bash said: "He was once an ice-cream man — his wife still refers to him as Mr. Softie."

The West German semi-documentary "Red Love" features interviews with Helga Goetze, who left her husband and family after giving birth to seven children to become a sexually liberated woman. Explains filmmaker Rosa von Praunheim: "It's filmed in dirty video, as dirty as Helga's obscene language, theories, poetry and suggestions." "How many men did you sleep with last week?" the fiftyish Helga is asked. Her reply: "I don't sleep with people any more, I fuck."

The Australian flick, "Lonely Hearts" details in a touching way the romance of a middle-aged piano tuner and a sexually repressed woman bank clerk. Added attraction: whenever the tuner can't practice his fingering and his wooing meets opposition, he escapes into the nearest porno theatre and the viewers are exposed to unexpected screen exposures.

"What sex life?" asks Phyllis Diller. "I went to the Virgin Islands and they gave me a hero's welcome."

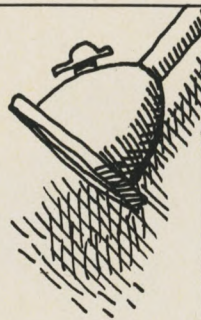

Those Times Square guys who print fake newspaper gag front pages for $4 are still among the most prim and proper in that notorious New York City area. Says one: "We won't set words like 'shit' or 'fuck' in type, but 'fart' is okay; in fact, quite popular, like in 'fart heard around the world.'"

Radio-TV host Joe Franklin overheard this conversation in a singles' bar not far from his Times Square office. She: "I don't believe in sex on the first date." He: "How about on the last?"

Merchandise Service Of America introduces some of the most adult novelty clothing to be found at the most fashionable boutiques. They're responsible for the legends you find on T-shirts that read: "If You Think Sex Is A Pain In The Ass, Then You're Doing It Wrong," ... "Eat Me. I'm A Jellybean — I Come In Colors" ... "I'm So Horny Even The Crack Of Dawn Looks Good, and "Beer Drinkers Make Better Lovers, They Just Don't Remember It." The firm's Kat Design T-Shirts come with cartoon illustrations and such sage messages as, "The Word of the Day is Legs — Help Spread the Word." Lets!

"Some hospital nurses are so sadistic," claims Bill Cosby, "That if they don't like you, they keep your bedpan in the refrigerator."

The British import, "Experience Preferred — But Not Essential" is the story of a young female student earning $$ as a waitress in a small seaside resort hotel. One of the film's zany characters is a naked sleep-walker who night after night, regularly as clockwork, walks through female staffers attic bedrooms — exposing himself while breathing heavily, without even knowing what he's doing. There are also the sexy waitresses, especially Mavis, whose horny trucker boyfriend insists on having sex with her each night on the beach, rain or shine.

Joey Adams asks: "If sex is such a driving force, how come so much of it takes place in parked cars?"

Diane Grosskopf's book, "Sex & the Married Woman" (Wallaby) has chapter after chapter on sexual desires, extra-marital affairs, fantasies, orgasms, etc. One married woman is quoted: "My hubby's first sex was with a whore and he still loves whores and fantasizes about the 'perfect fuck.' So I have a lot of porn clothes and act out porn fantasies in bed. And I verbalize to him about whores, their thin dresses and he can see their nipples getting very hard and they're not wearing any underwear. He goes nuts, and I must say, I also get very excited just talking about this fantasy."

Viewing the main dish at a banquet, Milton Berle cracked: "This chicken looks like it's been fucked to death."

Comic Jack Carter told an audience that "Dolly Parton can do 30 pushups without leaving the floor."

A few titillating tidbits from the Jove paperback series, "Nicole's Private Diary": "The humpy Countess' ballooning breasts are tipped by a mouth-watering pair of brown nipples that cry out to be licked and mouthed..." And: "My hands spread over the curves and valleys of my bosom, igniting the crimson crests of my nipples with a velvety touch."

"What is a Texas virgin?" asks Henny Youngman, who also supplies the answer, "A gal who can run faster than her classmates."

Diana Ross seems to have appropriated some of Mae West's funniest and sexiest lines and often uses them during live concerts, for example: "Is that a pistol in your pocket or are you glad to see me?"

isn't as prevalent as most executives would like for us to believe.

"Men bullshit a lot," says Dave, who works for an executive search firm. "Wouldn't you think I'm important if I told you our receptionist slips into my office for three quickies a week?"

Having seen the receptionist, I'd be impressed by three times a year.

Dave says, "No one — not just companies, but non profit and government groups — will hire the bastard who might be screwing a secretary when the auditors drop by. Or, if they do hire him, they'll put him in a low-paying job where someone can verify his physical presence at any given moment."

Dave works hard for his firm as well as for himself. His boss enjoys telling prospective clients that this young job counselor is so good that various groups hire him for consultancies. Dave's arrangement is fairly standard in business: while he may occasionally use his own workday to conduct personal business, he may not use company employees on company time for support purposes.

"Even though consultancies require secretaries," Dave explains, "I take the policy to mean I shouldn't hire those who work for the firm. I pick young, pretty ones. When a girl gets a chance at a second job with me, you know she's damn good in bed."

Dave's refusal to hire coworkers on a free-lance basis comes from an experience during his very first job — as a college counselor. He saw a bright, young assistant dean denied promotion to a dean's job (about $6,000 per year in salary).

limited but we're clever enough to recognize and sing out her bountiful charms.

Hailing from the South, it's only natural that the first boat Sandy owned was a yawl. It was given to her by her uncle who was a well-known skipper in every port — he didn't pay his bills inland either. We told Sandy we'd like to walk down the gangplank to the sea of matrimony with her but she said we were wet behind the ears and suggested we drown any such silly ideas in a barrel of bilge water.

We thought we'd seek solace in port — adding whiskey to raise our spirits. But we caught sight of Big Up Front Sandy again and it's clear sailing ahead! Mates, hail a winner! ☐

The assistant dean had taken a secretary from another office along on a consultancy. She was pretty, divorced, and a swinger. She also talked to coworkers.

A man doesn't need multiple degrees to become the boss. Consider Larry, who barely escaped high school with a diploma and who surprised some of his former teachers by winding up with jobs in construction work instead of in jail. Larry wasn't dumb. He quickly figured out that subcontractors had more status and better incomes than the men who worked for wages. He decided painting should become his specialty.

According to Larry. "My best jobs are apartments or town-houses. The builders want basic white. Painting isn't heavy labor. I pay minimum wage. During the summer months, I hire hungry coeds. During the winter, I go for the gals who hated being waitresses or receptionists or motel maids."

When business is good, he'd die of exhaustion if he tried to ball every gal he hires. But he always makes sure that two or three are eager to volunteer to spread for the boss. He has two letters of commendation from local women's groups. They are officially pleased that he employs females on construction jobs, thus helping to open up the world of work to women.

John is a photographer with good contacts in a nearby community college. Most of John's best work will never make a gallery or a major magazine. He takes on industrial contracts, including annual reports. At times, the work pours in so rapidly he needs help.

"The college has a very good photography program," John says. "Photography students always need money desperately. So I call a teacher I know and tell him I'm subcontracting jobs at good flat fees. I only hire on the basis of portfolios. You'd be amazed how many coeds include nude self-portraits in their work. If the gal who shows me such a nude delivers on the promise, I can guarantee her a steady income for the duration of her college career."

All three small businessmen — Dave, Larry, and John — could find themselves in court on sexual harassment charges if they made hiring or payment contingent upon the gals' willingness to accept unwelcome sexual advances. They all know that welcome advances are fully legal. That's why each lets the female make the first offer.

A non-practicing attorney who works for my outfit tells me that John runs the least risk — that a businessman who contracts for a service is legally different from a boss who hires an employee. He also says that the three men all could face a discrimination suit filed by a man who didn't get one of the jobs they offered. He wouldn't take such a case if he were in private practice, he says. Judges tend to laugh at men who claim women got ahead by opening their pussies.

Insofar as sexual harassment goes, the three men are home free, says the attorney. Even if there's what he calls a gray area involved, neither the government nor the pressure groups will be interested in a small businessman. Why go after Larry or Dave or John when you can attack a firm listed on the New York Stock Exchange or your local branch of the state university? Publicity counts.

These three small businessmen gave me an idea a few years ago. Like Dave, I work for an outfit that enjoys listing the outside accomplishments of employees in the proper places. The big boss doesn't actually say that Leonard

"Now I see why your wife hates sex."

Landing is Mr. X of AB department; he merely hints at a sales record that contains about two men's mag articles per year for over a decade. He doesn't even know that until 1981, I had another pen name going — one that appeared on 21 adult books, until the publishing company went bankrupt. But this bastard who employs his mistresses and lets his immediate subordinates fire anyone else who tries the same stunt loves to boast of some op-ed pieces I've done under my legal name. And when he thinks about how he can sell the fiction and non-fiction I've written for magazines you can find in your dentist's waiting room, he drools.

Both he and I agreed that my background should translate into local work. I edited a community theater magazine for three years. He asked me to. Studying it, I decided that it needed a fashion column. Women's fashion. I have trouble matching tie width to current styles. Women's styles baffle me — even when they turn me on. So I advertised for a fashion writer.

Six women answered the ad with sample columns. None knew a sentence from a sextet.

Since four were either employees of advertisers or the proprietors of boutiques which might advertise, I had to hold interviews. One of the genuine businesswomen was slightly over 30, separated from her husband, a walking argument for the eroticism created by combining the right clothes with sexy perfume, and proud of what the writers of historical romances call "a generous bosom." When we met, I explained that her basic ideas were quite good, but that her writing skills were inadequate. I said that I doubted I could use her unless she had several evenings a month for editorial conferences.

The line was so goddamn transparent I almost flinched. Her answer was to suggest using her apartment for the conferences.

I paid a teenage girl $20 per column from my own pocket. A high school newspaper editor, she would earn a scholarship the next year — and she deserved it. She turned whatever it was that my fashion editor said into English. That little editing job so thrilled my dear columnist that we had to spend several nights in "conference" each month getting her copy into final shape. Her bosom wasn't all I found generous.

Pleased by the results of that adventure, I decided to take on one of those dreadful jobs creating and editing an "anniversary" magazine for a local organization. A friend had told he how much the governing board would pay . . . if pushed. I pushed. They agreed.

The timeframe involved made it impossible for me to do all the work myself. I subcontracted all the personal interviews to a former newspaperman who had gone into governmental public relations. He might have paid me just for the privilege of doing something closer to real journalism again. I gave him a decent deal. The other research involved library work. I called the head of the English department at the local community college and asked for his best students.

The first five interviews turned up a little bit of writing talent and two females who were enough to turn the world's most macho stud gay. On the sixth try, I hit pay dirt. Caro was a straight-A student, a 19-year-old brownish-blond beauty so eager to earn money that she stripped on the spot to show me that she meant "working closely" as more than a metaphor.

A few subsequent experiences have convinced me that a small business can lead to a big sex life. I don't give a damn if I make a profit. I lose a helluva lot less than I'd spend hitting single bars. And none of the action interferes with my 9 to 5 work.

In fact, I can look at a Shelley and shrug my shoulders. She'd be a nice adventure. There was a time when I might have risked a lot for her. Now I simply write her off . . . unless, of course, she applies after hours and after she's been fired by my outfit. Then we'll see if that look in her brown eyes is for real.
