Knockers & Nipples

EDITORIAL

It's our Bicentennial. It's a good time to remember that "Our liberties we prize and our rights we shall maintain," applies to what you choose, insisting on your constitutional rights. The Constitution guarantees your right to make your own choice of what you want to read, to view, to enjoy—and it all started here 200 years ago.

The fight for our freedom wasn't limited to native-born Americans. To many who loved America, who helped us fight and win our independence, we owe a great debt—to LaFayette, Von Steuben, Pulaski, to name only a few of the "foreigners" who helped make our Bicentennial possible by fighting when things were tough.

Not all of our foreign help was in deeds. Some of the most important help was in concepts. A great source of ideas was Voltaire, the brilliant French novelist, playwright and essayist, considered the wisest man of Europe.

You'll find his thoughts in many places. One often chiseled in stone on libraries, schools and public buildings and emblazoned on the mastheads of newspapers is, "I disapprove of what you say but I will fight to the death for your right to say it."

Many of the Founding Fathers—Franklin, Madison, Monroe, Mason—were influenced by Voltaire, especially Thomas Jefferson, who declared, "I have sworn on the altar of God undying enmity to every form of tyranny over the mind of man!" This fierce insistence on individual liberty pervades our Declaration of Independence and our Constitution.

200 years later the spirits of Voltaire and Jefferson are still vibrantly alive, especially in the First Article of our Bill of Rights, guaranteeing freedom of speech and the press, guaranteeing your right to choose for yourself what you will read, or view, or enjoy.

Your determination to maintain that right—to fight for that right against all who would steal it from you—might be the best possible way to celebrate the Bicentennial.
